Short Story – Approx. 3,200 Words – Literary Fiction John Updike wrote that it was his duty to “give the mundane its beautiful due.” Like Updike, Stefan Bourque also finds beauty, compassion and hope in the most ordinary of places. In “Roll the Bones,” Bourque paints an intimate portrait of one married couple's everyday life complete with their struggle to keep their heads above water financially and emotionally as they dream of better days ahead. With Bourque's tight, narrative prose and his distant camera that still manages to capture an unflinching empathy, the reader becomes keenly aware that as the couple struggles, their love and dedication to one another cleaves away the voices of the past and the doubts of the future to show even now they are in the best of days. Stefan Bourque, author of the books, “Juggler,” “Darker” and “My Name Is Joe,” shows us that he is never more alive as a wordsmith than when he examines the everyday moments that make us all what we are.
