These stories are based on parts of my life growing up in Arizona in the 1960's and raising a family in California in the 1990's-2000's. If there was a category called magical memoir or fantasy autobiography it might be one of those. I wanted to contrast both periods with humor and hopefully, some insight into how the world has changed, at least for me. The title, Hunting Dinosaurs, implies we wake up every morning with certain expectations, but the world keeps evolving into something we hadn't quite considered. As a father and a son, I saw it everyday, but didn't recognize it. We are constantly chasing some notion that disappears as soon as you believe you have it within your grasp – hunting an assumption that no longer exists.
