The period 1913-23 in Dublin encompassed the Lockout, the Home Rule debates, the First World War, the Easter Rising, the War of Independence, and the Civil War. These iconic events not only created the Ireland of today, but also helped generate change around the world. Much has been written on the iconic events and key figures of the period, but this book shows through fascinating photographs the story of the thousands of ordinary people who were involved in all these events. It gives a fascinating insight into the Dublin of the day and the lives of the people who lived there.
